SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY.

SHAPING THE CHILD.

The problem of fitting education to the individual child makes slow progress, but a late book by Samuel G. Smith emphasizes its need. The evidence is cited of a Danish physician, Dr. F. Lang, who found that in 20 years 44 related families had sent 77 patients to insane asylums. In a few generations, 258 serious neurotic cases had appeared in these families, and all were traced to the evil influence of one neuropathic female ancestor. But the deviation from the normal included genius as well as madness. These same families have had an unusual proportion of gifted men and women, and have included 2 cabinet ministers, 1 foreign ambassador, 3 bishops, 3 generals, 3 admirals, 9 university professors, 44 poets and artists, and many locally well-known public officials. In 28 of the families were 72 individuals whose special intellectual ability had gained for them prominent positions. All this leads to the question whether the original neuropathic ancestor should have been killed off, and it is concluded that there is little doubt that proper care and training in childhood would have saved 77 persons from lives in asylums.

MIMICRY.

The caterpillar of the lobster moth was pointed out as the most remarkable example of mimicry in Nature in a late London lecture by Mark Webb. It is an ant in appearance when first hatched; then it looks like a leaf; and on being alarmed it shakes its antennae in close resemblance to a spider. Black and white or black and yellow are Nature's danger signals. Black and yellow are warning colours of snakes and wasps, and of caterpillars and butterflies that birds do not eat. Other creatures mimic the colours for protection, the black and white of the young cuckoo frightening away rats.

FUEL LOST IN WASTE.

How Great Britain might by scientific methods save 40 to 60 million tons of coal a year is shown by Dr. Beilby in a report of the British Science Guild. Oil engines, with more efficient use of blast-furnace and coke-oven gas, are aids in economizing.

A LABORATORY OF RADIOACTIVITY.

A special laboratory for tests, research and instruction in radioactivity is the novel institution established at Gifford miles from Paris, with Jacques Danne as director. A main building has testing rooms, research department and collections; a second building, 700 feet away, is isolated for strongly radioactive substances; and three other buildings provide workshops, forges, engines, dynamos, storage batteries, library, offices and drafting rooms. The accurate tests of ores, products and apparatus are expected to be of great advantage to physicians, miners and factories. More than 30 radioactive elements are now known, but only four or five are commercially important; and of more than 150 minerals yielding uranium, thorium or radium only ten are of sufficient abundance and richness to be of use. The search for new sources of radioactivity is of great concern. The chief commercial radioactive products are salts of radium and mesothorium, and the limited supply is almost entirely put to medical uses.
Many applications—such as that of measuring atmospheric electricity in special instruments—await a greater abundance of high grade.

SUNSHINE FOG.

Sunshine as a producer of fog has been a subject of investigation by Dr. John Aitken, the Scottish meteorologist. In the last four winters, it has been found that when the wind was light, somewhat damp, and came from the direction of towns, sunrise or the appearance of the sun was invariably followed by the formation of fog; but that when the wind came from a direction having no source of pollution, sunshine had no fog-forming effect. Laboratory experiments were made with the various products of coal combustion. From the results it appears that the fogs are caused by the action of the sun on sulphur compounds from the coal, and also by the hydrogen peroxide formed by the sunshine in the air. The particles thus formed can condense vapour in unsaturated air—as can also radioactivity and the electric discharge.

WHEN IT WAS EASIER TO FLY.

As increase in weight and size of a flying animal increases in greater proportion the power necessary for propulsion in air, E. and A. Harle conclude that our largest flying birds represent the largest flying size. They conclude that the giant pterodactyls and dragonflies of Cretaceous and Carboniferous times owed their flight to a denser atmosphere than now exists.

WEIGHING ODOURS.

The amount of odour given off by flowers, essential oils and other substances has long been a matter of wonder, which has found expression in the statement that a grain of musk may perfume an apartment for years without appreciable loss. But Signor Salvioni, an Italian physicist, has now made the loss measurable. He has devised a balance sensitive enough to weigh even odours, and said to depend for its chief part upon a very fine thread of glass fixed at one end and extending horizontally. The substance to be weighed is placed on the free end. This causes a deflection, and the amount is measured by a micrometer having a powerful magnifying-glass for making its readings, great care being taken to avoid errors from such causes as temperature variations and air currents.
It is claimed that, with proper adjustment, a variation in weight as small as the thousandth of a milligram—or one fifteen thousandth of a grain—can be accurately determined.

COAL-USING WITHOUT MINING.

In the experiment to be made by Sir Wm. Ramsay, producer gas is to be generated in coal seams in the ground.

and used for driving gas-engines. The power of the engines may be applied to the production of high-tension electric current, to be distributed to a distance.
It is proposed to sink a bore hole about 18 inches in diameter to the coal stratum, putting down a tube to keep out the water, and adding two concentric tubes within the outside one. The coal being fired, combustion could be kept up in the earth by air forced down the outside tube.
The heat would distill the coal, and the gas could be brought to the surface in the space between the middle and the inside tube.

NATIONAL TIME-CONTROL.

Wireless control of the time of Germany from a single tower 100 meters high is proposed by the society at Fulda. One of the three clocks in the tower would close a circuit every minute, sending out waves, and advancing the receiving clocks one minute. A simple flagstaff would be sufficient for the receiving antennae. A single receiving clock could serve an entire village, as it could be made to regulate several hundred secondary clocks.

STOMACH & LIVER
TROUBLESBILIOUSNESS, HEADACHES, NERVOUS DEPRESSION

Do you suffer from nervous depression, headaches or biliousness? Do you feel dull and heavy, tired, limp and listless?
Have you lost your vigour, lost your interest in life? If so, your stomach and liver are out of order. You need a tonic to strengthen your stomach and to gently stimulate your liver. Mother Seigel's Syrup is the remedy you need. The herbal extracts it contains quickly restore those organs to healthy working order, and thus raise your vitality, restore your strength, and give you new energy and new life.

YIELD TO THE HERBAL TONIC

Mr. E. N. Calmer, of West London, near Mowbray, C.P. writes:—"Some years ago I had heaviness and pains at the chest after eating, and also constant bilious headaches accompanied by vomiting. I lost all appetite and became very despondent. I was then advised to try Mother Seigel's Syrup.
I did so, and by the time the fourth bottle was finished, all traces of my ailments had entirely disappeared. I have had no recurrence of these complaints, and have been well and vigorous ever since. I still take Mother Seigel's Syrup occasionally as a tonic." January 16th, 1912.

THE CHINESE IN MALAYA.

It was the patient, plodding, unimaginative, but very matter-of-fact Chinaman, says the Malay Mail, who first laid the foundations of the material prosperity of Malaya by sluicing for tin in the alluvial valleys, and along the hillsides of the Peninsula. And to-day we see him coming into the F.M.S. in ever increasing numbers with the same object principally in view, the winning of tin and the gathering together of sufficient of this world's gear to enable him to return at some indefinite time or other to the land of his forefathers. Of course he also follows many other occupations, but it is principally as a miner and a general labourer that we consider him. The acting British Resident, Mr. P. G. Broadrick, in his Report on Selangor for 1911, tells us that the number of Chinese who entered the State by sea during that year were returned as 45,509, an increase of 14,709 on the previous year, while the emigrants amounted to 24,512, an increase of 2,467. The last census showed that there were 150,908 Chinese in Selangor, while a satisfactory feature is the increasing number of females. Of the 56,073 persons engaged in mining in the State 55,087 were Chinese. As a rule the Chinaman is a peaceable, law-abiding creature, asking merely to be left alone to pursue in peace the even tenor of his way. He is not interested in the politics of the world at large; his own concerns absorb most of his energies, mental or physical, and if he gets into trouble it is generally because of some falling-out with a com-patriot or because of some secret society or other, for which he has a national penchant. Yet, this notwithstanding, the Protector of Chinese and his staff have a fair amount of work to get through in the course of the year. Twenty-seven Chinese, for instance, had in 1911 to be banished from Selangor, among them being the three headmen of an illegal society discovered at Klang; then an "institution" styled the Chinese Young Men's Christian Association, which had become a centre for preaching the doctrine of assassination in connection with the Chinese revolutionary propaganda, was dissolved and action had also to be taken in regard to several so-called schools instituted with the same object. Again we read:—"An attempt by the jirikish owners and pullers of Klang to establish a secret organisation in that town in order to monopolise the business was checked by the action of the Protector of Chinese and District officer."

A WONDERFUL VOYAGE.

While the great steel-built liner, with her fifty thousand tons, her tramping engines, her wireless telegraphy, may come to utter disaster, as we have recently had miserable reason to know, a little cockle-shell of a ketch, no bigger than the caravel of Columbus, and built a hundred years ago, has accomplished a voyage of 6,000 miles in safety. The Seal, of 33 tons register, has arrived at Durban after a voyage of 144 days from Bideford Quay. Commanded by the Norseman who bought her, as the Norse buy so many discarded British vessels and run them at a profit, and manned, in part at least, by those "men of Bideford in Devon," whose forefathers sailed with Drake in the Golden Hind, the stout little ship faced, fought, and conquered the fury of the Atlantic and the rollers of the Agulhas. Given sea-room, there is nothing in the ocean which a stout ship, manned by stout hearts, cannot face. Good British oak and elm, with Indian teak, are the materials of which she is built, and there are none which better resist the assaults of time. The Seal is now the oldest vessel upon Lloyd's Register; but it is not many years since there was one still plying the coastwise trade between London and Newcastle which dated from the reign of Queen Anne. The true romance of the sea is the story of what man has done in little ships. The Seal, unperturbed by her buffeting, is now about to go to take the sea-lion in the South Indian Ocean. We wish her "good hunting."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE AGE OF MIRACLES.

The Daily Graphic of the 6th ult., says:—

Two events are chronicled to-day which only a few years ago would have been regarded as so miraculous as to be incredible. Yesterday, in the gardens of Buckingham Palace, a demonstration was made before Queen Mary to prove that it is possible to carry on conversation through the air without any material link, although the speakers are so far apart as to be quite out of hearing of one another. That is just the kind of tale that used to thrill us when, as boys, we read the "Arabian Nights." To-day we think little of the marvel because we are told that it is merely the natural development of an earlier marvel—wireless telegraphy. The other miracle chronicled is a series of flights in the newest type of human conveyance, the hydro-aeroplane. It suffices to mention two. Commander Samson flew right round the coasts of Kent and Sussex from Sheerness to Portsmouth, accomplishing a journey of 194 miles in three and a half hours, and then gracefully alighting on the water like a seagull resting after its flight. Lieutenant Spenser-Grey was in one respect less successful, for his journey was interrupted by some damage to his engine; but he achieved the almost greater triumph of demonstrating that he could repair the damage while the hydro-aeroplane was riding on the waves. In the nineteenth century we all thought that man had almost completely conquered nature; the twentieth century is teaching us that the conquest is only beginning.

A HOUSEHOLD NECESSITY.

IN the best regulated families the little ills of life will creep in. Some member of the family circle may occasionally suffer from Biliousness and Indigestion, and one or the other will from time to time exhibit the well-known symptoms of Constipation. From these little troubles more serious complaints arise, and should therefore not be neglected. The slight headache, bad breath, and a discoloured tongue are the index to a disordered stomach; and the necessity of keeping a safe, sure, and reliable remedy in the house is apparent. By following such a course the more expensive method of calling in a doctor will be found quite unnecessary. That Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are the very best Family Medicine is vouched for by thousands of grateful men and women who speak from personal experience.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are not simply a purgative medicine which forces the food out of the body, depriving the stomach of its nourishment and thus starving the system. They contain the essential properties that are temporarily lacking in the stomach through weakness, and complete the digestion and assimilation, and so restore the functions of the digestive organs by obtaining the maximum of nutriment from the food which sustains the body and assures good health.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are an efficient, reliable, and safe remedy placed on the market at a price within the reach of all. The Pills being sugar-coated, are pleasant to take, and retain their full medicinal properties. They are packed in amber-coloured bottles—not in cheap wooden or pasteboard boxes—and are thus always fresh and clean, impervious to moisture, unaltered by climatic conditions, and do not deteriorate by keeping as all liquid medicines do.

A Working Housewife

Nervous Depression, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness—

A cheerful, bright way of looking at things, a brisk activity which easily enables her to do almost as much as two ordinary persons, are some of the immediate benefits Mrs. Parker derived from Phosferine. Like most hard-working mothers, Mrs. Parker never found time to look after herself, and, as is always the case, suddenly broke down under the strain of endless household activities. Sudden noises caused her to tremble in feeble distress, gloomy fears assailed her, neuralgia and sleeplessness tortured her nerves relentlessly, and it was from this depth of misery that Phosferine raised Mrs. Parker. That this immediate effect was achieved by two doses of Phosferine, and Mrs. Parker's cure made permanent by a continuance of the tonic, demonstrates that with the aid of Phosferine any husband can save his wife from innumerable distresses.

Positively Cured and Prevented.

Mrs. A. Parker, 3, Linden Grove, Nunhead, writes:—"I got into a fearfully low nervous state through working too hard and overtaxing my strength. Any loud noise or a sharp knock at the door would throw me into a state of trembling and helplessness. I was always imagining all kinds of evils, and worrying about trifles. Neuralgia racked me with pain day and night, and prevented me from obtaining any rest. I got so worn and dejected that I could have cried out of sheer misery. My husband persuaded me at last to take some Phosferine, and the effect was simply marvellous; the pains not only ceased, but I have had no return since. It seemed more like magic than anything else that a few drops of Phosferine could produce such a change. I kept on with it, and I began to gain strength; the neuralgia disappeared for good, the nervousness, dejection, and worry left me, and now I feel quite well."—Nov. 17, 1911.

THE PATH OF A HUNDRED DEATHS.

GUY THORNE.
(Author of "When It Was Dark," "A Lost Cause," etc.)

SYNOPSIS OF INSTALLMENTS I-IV.—Arthur Hughes, formerly a rich barrister and engaged to Mariel Tracey, but now a convict in Marshmoor, receives a message from his old friend, Jim Mordant, by means of flashlights to the effect that on the next day, when Hughes, amongst other convicts, is to be transferred to the Isle of Wight, an attempt will be made to make his escape possible. On the following day Mordant, who is an army officer, appears at the station with his troops at the same time as the convicts. Just as the train is coming into the station an explosion occurs, filling the room in which the convicts are with smoke. In the confusion that follows Hughes, with the help of Mrs. Mordant, escapes in a motor, disguised as a clergyman. At a village on the coast he is disguised as a sailor and puts out to a yacht, where he is met by Mariel. On board the Seaweed John Saltus tells Arthur Hughes that in being imprisoned for theft he had been the victim of one of the most cunning criminals of modern life. Now he must help Saltus in avenging himself for the death of his father, which was caused by Arthur's conviction. When all seems to be going well an ironic message is received from Oshio Matsumi. Matsumi meets Mrs. Albemarle at the Empire Skating Rink. Their conversation is overheard by Mr. Wisten, who with Professor Martin, manager of the rink, is assisting Hughes' escape.

CHAPTER V.

OSHO MATSUMI.
Crown Square, Bloomsbury, is the most old-fashioned and remote of all the big west central squares. No great hotel has intruded upon its privacy; no flaming terra-cotta building of flats altered its Georgian aspect. In a large red-brick corner house, carefully kept, with its door painted dark green, the brass knocker shining brightly, and boxes of flowers in the windows, the Marquis Oshio Matsumi had lived for three years. His figure was perfectly familiar to everyone in the square; he had become a permanent resident, and his goings and comings, together with those of his friends, excited no special interest. The Marquis was known to be well-to-do, and to occupy his time principally in scientific pursuits. He really was what he represented himself to be, and was perfectly well-known to the authorities at the Japanese Embassy, though he rarely, if ever, went into society of any sort, and lived the retired life of a student and recluse. Now and then he read a paper, generally dealing with some abstruse form of chemistry, before one of the learned societies, but for the rest—had any of the prosperous solicitors, doctors, etc., who made up the inhabitants of the square been asked to point out a more placid, well-ordered, ordinary and respectable household in London than that of No. 100, Crown Square, they would have professed themselves unable to do so.

What little was known personally of the Marquis redounded to his credit. His short, dapper figure, always well-dressed in the correctest west-end fashion, always provoked a genial smile from the few people who knew him. Sir James Blew, the eminent physician opposite, who had attended the Marquis for a slight bronchial attack, spoke very highly of his charm of manner, and his attainments. The Vicar of St. Michael's, round the corner, always found the Japanese gentleman liberal with a cheque for a good purpose, and such lesser people, as postmen, and the policeman who patrolled the square, regarded No. 100 and its inmates with high favour, for half-crowns exuded plentifully from the solid, comfortable-looking house.

About half-past twelve, after the meeting at the Empire Skating-rink, a taxi-cab drove noiselessly into the square, and pulled up at No. 100. Mrs. Albemarle, dressed exactly as she had been two hours ago, descended from the cab, paid the driver, and mounted the steps of the house. She had but hardly stretched out her slim gloved hand towards the electric button, when the door swung open noiselessly, and the Japanese butler in ordinary evening clothes, bowed, inviting her to enter. She passed in in the manner of use and wont. The door closed behind her, and with a low bow, the little man-servant glided noiselessly over a large, ordinary London hall towards a green baize door in the corner by the side of the stairs. He pulled it open, and then preceded the visitor down a short carpeted passage, at the end of which was another door, this time of polished mahogany. He knocked, pushed it open, and Mrs. Albemarle entered.

In a moment all suggestion of London and an ordinary London room at night had vanished, as if by the trick of some magician's wand. The tall, dark, hard woman was transported into the very centre of the East. Although the scene was familiar enough to her, Mrs. Albemarle looked round with a sigh of pleasure. She was a cultured woman of artistic tastes, and every fibre of her was pleased and soothed whenever she came to visit the Marquis Matsumi.

The room was not large, but it was perfect. The floor on which she stood was of some polished wood. It shone like dark ice. The walls of the place were covered with dull red lacquer, through which threads of duller gold meandered. At one side of the room was a long, narrow recess; upon a pedestal of ebony stood one tall, pearl-coloured vase, nearly three feet in height, so perfect in shape, such a delicate and flawless example of the potter's art, that the eye rested upon it with the same pleasure with which the ear would hear a chord of lovely music. In another corner of the room was a long panel of bronze, reaching from floor to ceiling, exquisitely beaten into the representation of storks flying over water. Upon the upright Japanese easel was one single colour print by Hokusai, framed in a thin beading of gold. This was almost the whole of the decoration in the room. Two low divan chairs stood close to each other, and on a stool close by were three or four flame-coloured poppies in a porcelain bowl—and that was all. Yet, in the soft glow of two or three electric lights, which hung from the ceiling of polished wood, the rich simplicity of the room was perhaps unexampled in London. Anybody with an artistic eye would have revelled in it, but only a connoisseur would have appreciated the fact that the wonderful red and gold lacquer of the walls was priceless, that the polished floor must have cost every penny of £1,500, that the print by Hokusai would have sent all the collectors in Europe flocking to Christie's had it been announced for sale.

The woman moved gracefully towards the chairs, her high-heeled shoes tapping upon the parquet as she did so. Then she sank languidly backwards, half-closed her eyes, and waited.

Her face was very pale, and the great dark eyes blazed in it, while the lips were a little parted, as she inhaled the faint spicy odour of the room with a deep sensuous satisfaction, which was mingled with suppressed excitement and expectation. Upon her wrist hung a gold-chain bag, and she was about to open it to find her tiny cigarette case, when she saw a wrapper of purple silk with three or four slim straw-coloured Japanese cigarettes upon the stool by her side. She took one of these instead, lit it, and watched the ashed grey spirals of smoke rise and eddy upwards in the still air of the room. The thin, bitter taste of the tobacco seemed to please her. She inhaled it feverily, while her eyes roved round the place in which she was, drinking it in with a curious physical pleasure.

She had been sitting thus for some five minutes or so, when there was a sudden click, the long narrow panel of bronze opened into the room, like a door, and the Marquis Matsumi stepped out of the wall, closing the panel behind him. He had discarded the evening clothes which he had worn at the skating rink, and was now dressed in a long saffron-coloured robe, caught in round his waist with a cord of black silk, while his feet were thrust into hellish slippers of rice straw.

He advanced slowly and gravely towards Mrs. Albemarle, who had started up, and held out her hands in welcome. The smooth, inscrutable face, the face of a man who might have been any age, well cut, well formed according to Asiatic canons, was bereft of the slightest animation or emotion. It might have been a mask carved out of old ivory by some master of his art, and only a cool, smouldering fire in the long narrow eyes spoke of the living brain within.

"At last!" Mrs. Albemarle said, her voice low and caressing. "At last I am with you again, Oshio. Those days in Paris have seemed terribly long without you. And you never wrote!" "There was nothing to write about, Julia," came in cold, modulated sound from the Japanese, though the words flowed from the lips with the curious oily ripple the secret watcher had heard in the yellow saloon at the Empire Skating Club.

The woman's face glowed, and she made a gesture of impatience. "Are you all brain?" she said, her voice rising and trembling. "Are you nothing but mind? A mere machine, without human attributes? And they talk of Eastern passion! They tell us that those who have been born under the hot Oriental sun know how to love!" The Marquis raised one slim hand. "Julia," he said, "this is not the time to talk of such things. You know why I have summoned you here to-night. We are in danger, in deadly danger."

She caught at his hand and held it. "Oshio," she cried, and there was a strange light in her eyes. "There is something in your voice that I have never heard in it before. In all the years that we have—she hesitated for a moment, but her voice dropped—"that we have worked together, I have never heard that note come into your voice, and Heaven knows I have listened to it as no other person in the world has ever listened to it."

The impassive Japanese gently released his hand. "If my voice changed," he said, "it was with grave reason. I did not know that it showed fear; I am not afraid, Julia; I am only awake to the fact that the crisis has come at last. Restrain yourself. Listen with all your intelligence to what I have to say."

She made a strong effort, and leant back in the low divan. She looked at her with a gleam of approval, even of admiration. She saw it, flashed and trembled. "Ah," he went on, "now you are yourself again; the woman you have always been, more than all ordinary women—my partner, and my comrade. Now listen!" He leant forward in his chair, placing his thin yellow fingers together, and speaking in a restrained, monotonous voice which hummed out in the beautiful silent room like the persistent purring of a dynamo.

"A year ago," he said, "as I told you at the time, I was beginning to be seriously incommenced in my affairs by the interference of Mr. Hughes, the criminal solicitor. The organisation which we have established had never been suspected by a single soul in England. We did as we wished."

The woman's face grew paler, and she shuddered a little, while her eyes stared towards the opposite wall as if she saw beyond it. "Yes," she muttered, "we did as we wished, or as you wished. I have been your slave. For you I have made myself what I am, sister to Lucretia Borgia, to—"

"My dear Julia, spare me references to mediæval history. You have been my loyal comrade; that is all, the only friend and comrade I have in the world." With a cool, calculating motion, he stretched out his hand and touched her upon the arm. She quivered at the contact, her eyes lit up with mad passion, her beautiful face was transformed into a lurid mask.

ON CRUTCHES FOR FOUR MONTHS.

NOW WALKS WITH EASE.
YET ANOTHER VICTIM TO CRIPPLING RHEUMATISM FINDS COMPLETE CURE IN
DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Over twenty years have passed since the exceptional efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of Rheumatism was first demonstrated, and to-day the world-famous Tonic still stands easily first as a specific for this paralyzing malady. By eliminating from the blood stream the poisonous acid which is Rheumatism's cause, and rapidly turning it into a pure, rich, health-giving current, these Pills have naturally and easily restored multitudes of rheumatic sufferers, many of whom were in a much worse state than was Mr. W. van de Laar.

Telling of his own experience in this connection at his residence in Gang Tegal, Selambia, Batavia, the other day, Mr. van de Laar, who is a pensioner of the Dutch East Indian Army, said:—"So severe a hold had Rheumatism fastened upon me some two and a half years ago, that for four months I was compelled to use crutches in order to get about. The pains not only were in my legs and arms, but they affected my back so badly that it was only with the greatest difficulty I could stoop. At the same time my blood was impoverished, my nervous system was run down, and I suffered from headaches, dizziness and constipation.

"From one doctor I went to another, until in all four had treated me. After that I tried a number of advertised remedies. Yet still I remained in a deplorable condition.

"When finally persuaded by a friend to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People my attitude of mind was totally against this medicine, everything else tried previously having given me nothing but disappointments. But, feeling a little better after the first bottle of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I persevered through a course of them, and then found myself perfectly well. To be precise, it took seven bottles of these Pills to cure me; since then I have enjoyed excellent health in every respect."

Pure strong Blood means sound digestion, healthy skin, strong nerves and perfect health. That is why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People—the greatest Blood Builder and Nerve Tonic known to present-day Medical Science—enjoy a world-wide reputation as being the most certain remedy for Anaemia, Debility, Malaria, Rheumatism, Indigestion, Skin Complaints, Nervous Maladies and of the most serious and long-standing nature, and ladies' special aches and ills. Of dealers everywhere, and the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., 84 Szechuen Road, Shanghai, one bottle for $1.50, six for $8 post free.

THE PATH OF A HUNDRED DEATHS.

BY GUY THORNE.
(Author of "When It Was Dark," "A Lost Cause," etc.).

"Yes," she hissed, "I have done what I have done. I have done it for you! I regret nothing."

The slightest gleam of satisfaction passed through the man's dark eyes, flickered, and was gone. He knew his power, and now the monotonous voice once more hummed out into the room: "Let us have no more digressions," he said. "Listen to what I have to say. This Mr. Hughes was the greatest criminal solicitor of his day. Many families in the higher ranks of society—families with whom you and I have had to do—a rather horrible half-smile passed over his face for a moment—trusted Hughes and put their affairs into his hands. Bit by bit I found that Hughes was becoming aware that somewhere in London there existed, let me say, a certain force or power which produced certain effects. His attention began to be directed to me. It is not necessary for me to tell you how I discovered this, you know something of my organisation, of my many tentacles; you will guess how I began to be aware of this man's growing suspicions. To be aware of them was to investigate at once, and I found that shrewd and clever as Hughes was, there was another brain behind his, a power which nobody knew anything of, which nobody suspected. I need hardly tell you that I refer to my friend, Mr. John Salsus."

"Mrs. Albenarle gave a little gasp. 'I know,' she said, 'it is incredible, and yet it must be true.'

"It is true enough," the Marquis answered, calmly. "The stealthy dinner-out, the gourmet, whose opinion upon a meal could make the fortune of a restaurant, the plump and quiet bachelor so familiar to society, was not, and is not, what the world takes him for. I alone know the truth. In that room, Julia, we have been enemy, as cool, relentless, as persistent as any upon this earth. In him, and him alone, I recognise the master brain! I say it advisedly, John Salsus is upon my own intellectual level, a foe with whom even Oshio Matsumi must be wary how he crosses swords. Between them, Salsus and Hughes, quietly and persistently began their work. It became necessary, immediately necessary, to stop what was going on. I made several efforts—one of them you yourself are fully aware—but to my surprise, I found them useless. All my little ingenuities were met and foiled by Mr. John Salsus. In fact, laughable as it may seem in view of the past, I entirely failed to put either of these two gentlemen out of the way by any of my usual methods. I had recourse to others. You will remember the sensation when young Arthur Hughes was arrested, tried, and convicted for the theft of the Duke of Chester's vase. That was a master stroke. It failed in no detail, and a few months afterwards, stricken down by shame, and absolutely unable to solve the mystery, Mr. Hughes departed this life. Since that time, nearly five months ago to be exact, I had imagined that all danger from that quarter was over. I did not neglect the usual precautions. I had John Salsus watched to the best of my ability for a couple of months, but to all appearances the whole business had lost interest for him with the death of his friend, and he lived his usual society life. Julia! I, Oshio Matsumi! I have been caught napping! The death of Mr. Hughes had not stopped everything. Quietly, skillfully, relentlessly, John Salsus has been pursuing his ends. Arthur Hughes is free. He has been spirited away from Marshmoor, and the whole police of England and the Continent are searching for him in vain."

"But he will be found," the woman answered, quickly. "No prisoner has ever escaped for long. He will be found and sent back to prison."

The Japanese smiled quietly. There was a musing look in his eyes as if he were considering some problem at a game of chess. He shook his head slightly.

"No, no," he said. "The police will never find Arthur Hughes, unless, unless I can assist them. You do not realise what this means, Julia. Sometimes a wretched convict runs away upon the moors in a fog, and is speedily recaptured. In this case, a great organisation, under the control of a master mind, must have been employed. Knowing Salsus as I do, admiring his genius as I do, I am quite certain that nothing has been left to chance; and I am quite certain to Scotland Yard that Salsus was at the bottom of the escape, it would be found that his plans have been so carefully prepared that he could clear himself in an instant from the mere suspicion. Remember, Julia, that this escape has been contrived and carried out even as I myself should have done it. One thing I have done. I could not deny myself the pleasure. I shot an arrow into the dark; whether it reached its billet or not I cannot say; I think it probable. Studying the question of this escape with care, it became quite certain to me that at sometime or other in a ship must have been employed—the probability being that it was Salsus' yacht, the Synema. When I found that the yacht was not at Southampton at its usual moorings, I became certain, and despatched an ironical wireless telegram, which was doubtless picked up by the apparatus on board. It was uneasy, perhaps, but it may nerve our adversaries."

He paused for a moment, his brow wrinkled in thought, his fingers beating a restless tattoo one against the other. Mrs. Albenarle had been listening intently.

"It seems to me that you are exaggerating."

are not yourself to-night surely. Your mind is not working as it usually does. This escape is simply a prelude to a last and determined attack, which may mean our ruin. Salsus must know by whose agency young Hughes was put in prison. He can prove nothing of the means; my plans were far too well laid for that, but he is certain of the fact. Very well, then. Added to his natural genius and love for the work of, shall I say? unravelling mysteries, he has now the most powerful motive possible for bringing my career to an end. He has to avenge his dearest friend who died heart-broken, and to rehabilitate this young man in the eyes of the world. To do this he has already, with a supreme cool daring which merits my utmost admiration, committed one of the heaviest possible offences against the law of the land. He has become a criminal himself. It is obvious that no man would do this unless he was determined to the bitter end; but, here I touch the most vital part of the whole matter, there is something else. When Mr. Hughes died, he left behind him a sealed packet of papers in charge, as far as I have been able to ascertain, of John Salsus and another person whom it is not necessary to particularise at the moment. This packet was to be handed to his son when, in the natural course of events, his release from prison, he should personally claim it. Salsus himself and the other trustee did not dare to break the seals. This was to be done by the young man himself. Such were the strict injunctions left behind by the late Mr. Hughes. I was just—only just—too late in my efforts to get possession of these documents, made one false step—for which he has since paid the penalty—and I failed. At the present moment, for all I know, Salsus and Arthur Hughes may be in possession of evidence which may lead to the discovery of some of our operations. I do not know what the contents of this package are. I would give half my fortune to know, but I fear the worst. I fear that its opening will place weapons in the hands of our enemies, which will eventually lead them to the true solution of more than one mystery in London society that you and I know of."

The woman's face was white as linen now, the breath was coming from her pallid lips in short, sharp gasps.

"It is over, then?" she murmured.

"Not at all, my dear Julia, not at all," came the purring quiet answer. "The danger is great, the crisis is unique, but I, I rise to it. If ever my powers have been called upon before, they are called upon now. Our very lives are in danger, but we will not fail, you and I!"

"You have plans then? You do not feel everything is lost?"

"The Japanese smiled faintly. 'Do you not know me yet, Julia?' he asked.

"There are several things to be done. Arthur Hughes must be discovered. The police will never do it; I myself must do it; and indirectly put the police upon the track. That is one task. That sealed communication left behind by Mr. Hughes must be obtained and destroyed. That is the second task. And, finally, John Salsus must be removed. I failed before. This time I shall not fail. I will shortly give you an outline of what I propose, but calm yourself, Julia. Remember the great fact in our favour. Neither old Hughes nor Mr. Salsus of to-day have the slightest idea that you and I are partners. Of this I am as certain as a man can be. Our meetings at the Skating Rink have been so carefully contrived. The place was so out of the way of any of them. Only twice have I ever been to your flat during the last two years. On neither occasion was I observed. Your visit here to-night was rash, but it had to be. You are the unknown factor; you are the chief weapon in the swift and deadly campaign which opens against our enemies to-night."

The woman rose to her feet, her face was flaming with beautiful loveliness. "Ah," she said, with a long hissing intake of the breath, "it is on me you depend, after all, Oshio. Now we stand upon the very brink of hideous ruin, when one single false step may sweep everything away, you must come to me at last! You have spoken to me at rare moments of a departure from the life that I have lived and known. You have said that when you had achieved your aims in England, and gathered together the great sum of money, which surely must even now be almost complete, we should go together to your own country to live that lotus life among the cherry blossoms to which you have always intended to return."

She bent forward, lithe as a serpent, and caught the man by the shoulder. "Promise me," she said, "promise me, if we win this last battle that we shall go away together, and the world shall know us no more. Promise! Promise!"

Then, in a moment, his face changed swiftly, and shaking with excitement, he bent her shapely head towards his lips. "Listen," he said, and now his voice was tense and vibrating with horrible excitement. "Listen to my plan. Listen to the part that you must play."

For nearly three minutes he whispered in her ear, the hissing sibilance of his voice sounding like escaping steam in the quiet room.

Then, swiftly, she twisted away from him, her eyes shining like stars. She threw back her head, and peals of wild, wicked laughter echoed through the night.
